TWA MUSEUM PRESS RELEASE / JANUARY 26, 2021

CONFUSION REGARDING THE AIRLINE HISTORY MUSEUM AND THE TWA MUSEUM

This press release is intended to clear up confusion that currently exists among some members of the media and public regarding the National Airline History Museum and our TWA Museum. Both museums are located at the Kansas City Charles B. Wheeler Downtown Airport, however they are separate entities. The TWA Museum does not share any business or operational relationship with National Airline History Museum.

We wish the best to the National Airline History Museum as they are dealing with difficulties that they have shared with the public through social media and local broadcast media. We want to be very clear that the TWA Museum is not experiencing any such difficulties, continues to operate and expects to remain fully operational, welcoming visitors and continuing to function as an important member of the Kansas City aviation and cultural community. Furthermore, our business relationship with Signature Flight Support (our sub-lessor) remains strong. We have occupied spaces at 10 Richards Road for nine years and throughout that time, we have met all fiduciary obligations to Signature in a timely and reliable manner and fully anticipate continuing to do so.

We want our family of members and supporters, as well as the entire Kansas City community to know that we intend to continue operations. Our staff of thirty volunteers continues to serve with pride and enthusiasm. In fact, thanks to their efforts, we recently opened a new exhibit space. Additionally, our Board of Directors continues to explore and evaluate opportunities for our museum's expansion and growth in the future.
